

To those it does concern: If the broadcast industry is lobbying to stop these programs I think they are doing the customers of XM and the other satellite a great injustice. Of course I feel in general that lobbyist are self serving away. I do not even listen to 'regular' radio much any more, it generally sucks. TV does not fair much better. I pay for the programs of XM and if they wish to provide this features I think this is good and in fact I have used them in my travels, Because I don't use regular radio and the traffic reports on regular radio is tainted with commercials and almost not informing, the XM traffic and weather is more robust and is always there, and it has save me time and gas, and right now with what gas and energy prices thur the roof. XM offers another way of saving energy, the lobbyist against do not care about this or the common citizen and if anyone should listen to them just because of the power they have, that does not serve to the best interest of the travel public or the customers of XM. But I can almost hedge a bet the congress as most the time will be brought off, cause congress is not part of the system of checks and balances except to serve their own self interest. So think about it, don't slam the door on XM radio, you will also I think shut down the First amendment, and for the first time the First Amendment is will serves for a good thing. After all if the general broadcast industry wants us to listen to them they need to improve their programing and how they run their business. Isn't it funny, when a new kid comes on the block and does offer things the public wants, all the old hat get upset. People are sick of the same old humdrum of trash from general broadcasting networks, if the work to beat out XM or the other satellite radio, there is one sure fired way to do it...improve their product...works everytime. Free enterprize ... remember that.
